

The Proscenium of Sandy

The city has been approached by the new owner of an existing property in Sandy about an exciting plan that will add additional life to the civic corridor. The existing project which began over five years ago originally included three to four office buildings which were not completed. The new owner has approached the city on several occasions to discuss potential uses. The location of the project in Sandy's civic corridor would complete the southwest corner across from City Hall and would include three towers with office, retail and residential uses. The owner included these uses in the plan along with an exciting vision of a Broadway-style theater or a performing arts center to accommodate the South Valley's growing arts population.

Mayor Dolan noted that, "On several occasions the city has discussed the possibility of a Broadway-style theater or a performing arts center being located near the south end of the valley, but funding the project was always the issue. Having a developer come forward and offer to build a theater as part of a project is a great opportunity to Sandy and the South Valley."

The location of the project fits in with Sandy's master plan objectives to add a diversity of uses to the civic corridor like retail, office and entertainment venues as well as adding density to the projects.

Sandy's Director of Community Development, Mike Coulam stated, "Sandy has seen hundreds of new projects developed within the city in the last decade. Each one seems to complement the next by including new amenities and features. This project is accenting what is already in place and bringing a new level of excitement to the downtown area."
